CSAJ’s Mission & Vision

Mission:
The Center for Survivor Agency and Justice promotes advocacy approaches that remove systemic barriers, enhance organizational responses, and improve professional practices to meet the self-defined needs of domestic and sexual violence survivors.

Vision:
The Center for Survivor Agency and Justice envisions a world where all people have equal access to physical safety, economic security, and human dignity.
Today

1) Roll out the Guidebook, including highlighting its key features and ways to engage with it

2) Lay out the foundations of the link between economic insecurity and violence

3) Review the landscape of multilevel survivor centered economic advocacy

4) Preview the structure of upcoming Consumer Training Toolkits
What are consumer rights for survivors?

Consumer rights advocacy has the potential to equip survivors with critical information, tools, and options to address the profound and long-term economic harms stemming from abuse and poverty.

This includes legal and nonlegal advocacy to address issues such as credit reporting and repair, debt collection defense, credit discrimination, student loans, economic relief in family law, bankruptcy and foreclosure prevention and defense, tax relief (including innocent spouse relief), economic barriers in civil court, economic barriers to housing and employment, and addressing barriers to accessing and other economic opportunities.
What do consumer issues look like for survivors?
Payday Loans

Zoe is unable to open a banking account because the nearest bank is miles away. Rent is due and she may have to get her check cashed at the local check-cashing store again.

Credit-Related Barriers to Housing

Shakira fled from her abusive husband with her three children, and despite a 10-month apartment search (as well as reliable income from a full-time job and a guaranteed housing voucher), she and her children remain homeless; landlords keep rejecting her applications due to a previous foreclosure and damaged credit.

Court-Related Barriers

Jenna went to the court to get a protection order. She had to wait all day before her case was called and now she has to go pick up her children from school. The clerk said she must “choose” between her safety and picking up her kids. She’ll have to come back tomorrow but her boss is already upset that she’s missed so many work days.

Coerced Debt & Debt Collection

Mona owes over $10,000 to three different credit card companies for purchases that were made by her abusive partner without her knowledge. Now debt collection agencies are harassing her and threatening wage garnishment and property seizure.

Layla’s partner coerced her into writing fraudulent checks, resulting in criminal charges, which made it very difficult for her to get a job to support herself and her daughter.

Tax Debt & Liability

Jamie’s partner forced her into signing fraudulent tax returns. Now her wages are being garnished due to the tax debt.
Why is consumer rights advocacy important?

“While the domestic violence movement has engaged in critical economic justice work, many current efforts have focused upon identifying ways to maximize survivors' future income through programs such as job and financial literacy training. Less effort has been dedicated to remedying survivors' accrued economic damage, minimizing their expenses, and protecting their current assets. Consumer law does just that.”

Using the Guidebook: Practice Tips

Credit Report Advocacy

Safety when ordering credit reports

The first step in the credit advocacy process is frequently ordering a credit report; however, this simple step may lead to severe safety problems for survivors in hiding from their abusive partners. Credit reports contain current personal information, and when a consumer orders a credit report, that inquiry, including the location of where the inquiry comes from, shows up on the credit report.

While it is illegal for an individual to pull another person’s credit report without their permission, abusive partners and ex-partners frequently ignore this law. If an abusive partner has a survivor’s personal information and social security number, they are often able to pull the survivor’s credit report illegally. While the website annualcreditreport.com (the website where consumers can obtain their free annual credit report) asks very challenging security questions, these are questions that can frequently be answered by an intimate partner who has key financial information. Abusive partners can also find current addresses, employment, and places where the survivor is applying for credit by looking at a credit report. Therefore, survivors who are at high risk of stalking from their abusive partner may consider not applying for credit in their local area (for example, a mortgage or personal loan from a local bank).

Talk with survivors about the pros and cons of each strategy and help with advocacy efforts if housing managers or employers refuse to accept credit reports from the survivor.

Practice Tips

- There are various strategies to protect survivors’ privacy when pulling credit reports:
  - “Soft-Pull” or Third-Party Orders: If a survivor is concerned about stalking but wants to look at a credit report, you could consider partnering with a mortgage company or credit card company in another state to pull (order) the credit report for the survivor. For example, an organization in St. Louis partnered with a national commercial bank that was able to have the credit reports ordered in Seattle and Texas. There also may be opportunities to partner with national financial coaching organizations such as The Financial Clinic. By ordering a credit report in this manner, a client can confuse the abusive partner about where they are living.
  - Use Copies: Survivors can try bringing a recent credit report to a landlord or employer and ask if they will accept this report instead of pulling a new, additional credit report. This eliminates an “inquiry” which could tip off the abusive partner about where the survivor lives or works. Advocates and attorneys can work with the survivor to communicate the need for this with landlords and employers. Other landlords and employers have accepted letters or other information in lieu of a credit report for survivors. If landlords or employers refuse this option, consider the other strategies described here and continue working with the landlord to ensure the credit report is pulled when the survivor is ready to handle any fallout.
  - Use P.O. Box or Known Addresses: Survivors could also use a P.O. box or an address already known to the abusive
Using the Guidebook: Issue Spotting & “Think about it”

Credit screening or issue-spotting questions could include, but are not limited to:

- What are your biggest worries about your credit?
- When is the last time you reviewed your credit report?
- How has your partner impacted your credit history?
- Tell me about any concerns you have about looking at a credit report
- Have you ever been rejected for an account or service because of your credit report or score?
- Have you ever had a fraud alert or credit freeze?
- How has your credit history impacted your life?

(For more information about financial assessment questions, please see CSAJ’s assessment tool)

Think About It

Consider your advocacy strategies for a moment: Assume that Gloria is: Latinx, African-American, in a wheelchair, obese, wearing a Hijab, or Native American and has submitted a housing application online. Despite her poor credit history, she has received positive feedback from landlords over the phone, but once she arrives to view the apartment, the landlord requests a bigger security deposit or suddenly requires a minimum credit score. How would your approach to dealing with Gloria’s credit situation and its implication in other areas of her life would be different?

- Assessment questions throughout help frame, guide, and deepen SCEA
- “Think About It” sections challenge readers to broaden perspectives on SCEA
- Focus on how intersectional identities impact SCEA
Using the Guidebook: Survivor Stories

Gloria’s Story

Gloria’s story highlights some of the impact domestic violence can have on personal credit.

Gloria is a forty-six-year-old woman who left her abusive partner, Fred, last year after a six-year marriage and ten-year relationship. To provide distance from Fred, Gloria moved into a transitional housing program a few states away from her last residence. Gloria needs to find an apartment on her own in the next six months before she reaches her time limit in transitional housing. She is coming to you because she has received several phone calls lately from debt collectors regarding debt she doesn’t know about. Gloria and Fred are still married but are separated. Divorce proceedings haven’t begun yet because Gloria is afraid of how Fred will react.

For years, Fred controlled Gloria’s spending. She wasn’t allowed to have any credit cards and had to save up cash to buy small things for herself. However, Gloria secretly held onto a store account that she had since before her relationship with Fred. She hasn’t used the store card for several years. Gloria is a pre-school teacher at a day care center. She loves her job, but wishes the pay were better. She receives the bare minimum of benefits and finds herself scraping by each month. Gloria hasn’t seen her credit report for several years. She was denied credit when she tried to buy a car three years ago when Fred stopped picking her up from work on time. She gave up and started taking the bus. Gloria is also confused because she has been turned down for housing from five landlords, but she has a good rental history.

Gloria is coming to you to help understand and improve her credit report and to help her locate housing.
CSAJ’S Framework
Reciprocal relationship of abuse and economic hardship

Women living in poverty experience violence at twice the rate of those who do not.
Economic abuse

“Economic abuse involves behaviors that control a woman’s ability to acquire, use, and maintain economic resources, thus threatening her economic security and potential for self-sufficiency.”

Economic impact of domestic violence

Domestic violence is linked to a range of negative economic outcomes, including:

- Decreased safety options
- Increased risk of future violence

- Income & Job Loss
- Housing Instability
- Limited Transportation
- Decreased Access to Childcare
The “Economic Ripple Effect” of Domestic Violence

- During relationship: job loss, credit damage, theft, debt, missed work days, forgone professional advancement
- Leaving relationship: relocation costs, incurred debt from marriage, legal fees
- Short term: forgone wages, housing instability, cost of childcare, increased cost of independent living
- Lifetime: mental health effects, obstructed/slowed professional development, increased vulnerability to future abuse

Seeking Safety: “The Price of Protection”

SHOCK: $312 - $1,018 (2014 dollar) lost in the year after petitioning

STALL: Losses not recouped over time

(C. Shock)

(D. Stall)

(Hughes & Brush, 2015)
Short Term: Systemic Failings

- 31% of families entering homeless shelters are due to IPV
- 80% of survivors exit shelter without a safe, affordable, or permanent place to go

- 15-41% of custody cases where court mediators fail to identify IPV
- 70% of survivors not awarded child support (for 30% who do, levels are insufficient to offset decreased income)
Lifetime: Pathways of Economic Disadvantage

Consumer Impacts
- 81% report “trouble with credit rating”
- 76% state financial hardship due to abusive partner
- Collateral consequences on employment/housing

Opportunity Costs
- Only 1 in 5 able to retain full-time employment
- Employment instability last up to 3 years
- Constrained career growth ($350 less starting salary, slower growth)
- Reduced educational attainment (1/2 year)
- Negative impact of work history

Health & Quality of Life
- Utilize healthcare up to 4x as much with higher costs
- Increased health costs last up to 15 years after abuse
- Impact on physical, mental, social, and spiritual wellness
Compounding Factors: Structural Inequality
Predictors of IPV Across Race

What are the unique structural barriers facing survivors?

Resource Availability

Access to: Transportation, Housing, Education, Employment

Looks Like:
- Distance to court or services (across the state)
- Slow response time
- Have to stay in same court for all legal actions

Service Response

Experience with: Few, dispersed, short-staffed services; lack of staff information/ awareness

Looks Like:
- Judges preference for 2-parent homes
- Turn over of court decision makers
- Caseworkers make survivors jump through hoops (requirements, eligibility)

Impact of Policies

Outcomes of: Geographic isolation combined with a lack of privacy

Looks Like:
- Reduction of abuser’s charges/ increased plea deals
- Women on parole who call 9-11 violate probation
- Institutions defer responsibility, “passing the buck”
- Time frame from arrest to conviction is too long
Social inequality constrains survivors’ options for safety

Discussion:
What economic or consumer issues are showing up for survivors you work with?
Why Consumer Rights? What’s Required?
A reminder...

“While the domestic violence movement has engaged in critical economic justice work, [mainstream] efforts . . . have focused upon identifying ways to maximize survivors' future income through programs such as job and financial literacy training. Less effort has been dedicated to remedying survivors' accrued economic damage, minimizing their expenses, and protecting their current assets. Consumer law does just that. Consumer law and other economic legal remedies have the potential to provide survivors with the legal tools to address issues such as debt collection, credit discrimination, bankruptcy, damaged credit, [tax advocacy] and foreclosure. In this respect, civil attorneys and advocates are well situated to address the substantial economic harms faced by survivors.”

CSAJ’s Consumer Rights National Needs Assessment

- Over 220 lawyers and advocates participated
- Both consumer and DV advocates do some CR for DV survivors work, but there is a gap in intersecting expertise.

- DV advocates often do not:
  - Address ways in which coercion manifests as economic abuse
  - Screen for economic issues that require more technical expertise
  - Develop institutionalized policies, protocols, and practices to encourage inter-and intra-agency collaboration with economic experts
A Multilevel Approach to Economic Advocacy for Survivors

- Enhanced Individual Advocacy: Addresses both the physical safety and the economic safety needs of the survivor.
  - There is no safety without economic justice.
  - Economic advocacy and asset building strategies are ineffective without attention to the safety and privacy needs of survivors.

- Organizational & Community Reform: Requires a partnership between the DV, anti-poverty, and anti-racist fields that attends to the ways in which physical and economic risks facing survivors fundamentally shape their opportunities for securing safety.

- Systems Change: Local to federal efforts to remove institutional barriers, identify and implement laws/policies, and conduct impact litigation that addresses systemic inequalities.
Survivor Centered Economic Legal Advocacy

- What would our current work look like if we were to approach it from an economic lens?
  - Economic relief in civil protection orders
  - Economic relief in matrimonial cases

- How can we address the profound economic needs of survivors?
  - Screening for consumer and economic legal issues
  - Collaborating with consumer and other anti-poverty lawyers
  - Expanding our toolbox to include consumer legal advocacy
Laying the Landscape of Multilevel Survivor Centered Economic Advocacy Framework
Defining Survivor Centered Economic Advocacy

- Address both the physical safety and the economic safety needs of the survivor.

- Attending to the physical and economic risks fundamentally shaping survivor’s opportunities for increased safety.

- Survivors who work with advocates who employ survivor-centered models:
  - Have less difficulty obtaining community resources over time
  - Experience less violence over time
  - Report higher quality of life and higher levels of social support

Jada’s Story

- Lives with 2 year-old son Jonah, infant daughter Cameron
- Recently moved into her own apartment after leaving James who was emotionally, economically, and physically abuse.
- She has several collections accounts and she was convicted of check writing fraud two years ago due to the abuse. Paying restitution.
- Jada works as a part-time dietary aide; spotty employment record due to abuse and having young children; her mother-in-law watches her kids.
How do we do Survivor Centered Consumer Advocacy?

- Full and open assessment of financial situation
- Review and develop past, current, and future economic plans
- Attend to economic situation in the face of safety.
- Strategic partnership on current, past, and future economic situation
- Requires flexibility and willingness to suspend judgment
Jada’s Story (cont’d)

- Issued court papers which name her as a defendant in a debt collection lawsuit.
- Worried because she doesn’t have money to pay both the debtor and rent.
- Received a verbal warning at work after James came to the nursing home and refused to leave until Jada would talk to him.
- Frustrated that James filed his taxes first and put the kids as dependents on his return.
- Wants to have a bank account for direct deposit of her paycheck and for safety but hasn’t been able to get an account.
SCEA in Practice: Your turn!

What do you need to ask?

INDIVIDUAL SCEA

WHAT IS IT?
The economic and expansive safety work you do directly with survivors.

CHALLENGES

- Demands on time;
- Role specialization;
- Organizational philosophy;
- Lack of resources, lack of training/support for economic work, lack of supervision to support survivor’s in long-term economic work;
- There is no formula, SCEA requires creativity and new ways of looking at issues;
- Long-term work is time consuming;
- SCEA challenges traditional definitions of “the lawyer or advocate as the expert.” Here, both the advocate and the survivor are experts.

APPROACHING THE WORK

- What are you currently doing to address the economic needs of survivors? What has worked well?
- What specific challenges do you face in doing survivor centered economic advocacy?
- What do you want to know about the survivor’s safety?
- What do we want to know about the survivor’s strengths?
- What do you want to know about the survivor’s financial situation? How is it linked to their safety options?
- What can you do to assist?
- What information do survivor’s need?
- What tools can you provide?

STRATEGIES IN PRACTICE

- Full and open assessment of financial situation;
- Attending to the economic situation in the face of safety;
- Building a strategic alliance with the survivor to assess current, past, and future economic and safety situation;
- Flexibility and willingness to suspend judgment.
CHALLENGES

- Compartmentalized legal services;
- Structure of organizations (hours of operation, accessibility) do not fit with survivors’ daily lives;
- Organizational capacity of social service organizations is often restricted;
- Caseload levels make organizational changes hard to implement;
- Outcomes of “success” are not survivor-defined.

STRATEGIES IN PRACTICE

- Advocates can: present at staff meetings, talk with supervisor about protocols, provide cross-training, document consistent issues.
- Attorneys from outside organizations can: establish referral/case coordination process, request regular meetings to discuss trends, make introductions between systems actors and the DV organization.
- Program leaders can: update organizational policies based on SCEA principles, evaluate survivor feedback of services, assess economic needs, establish work groups or task forces on an issue, educate funders on importance of economic security and organizational capacity, provide meaningful SCEA supervision and training to advocates and attorneys.

ORGANIZATIONAL SCEA

WHAT IS IT?
The work your organization and everyone within it does to support survivors’ economic security and physical safety. (Support for individual advocacy work & broader efforts)

APPROACHING THE WORK

- What things within your own organization could assist survivors?
- What types of partnerships between organizations could enhance economic security for survivors?
- How do you utilize current partners?
- How can you leverage partnerships to forge new relationships?
- What can staff advocates and attorneys bring to enhance organizational change?
- Have you sat down to think about un-tapped resources, assets, or partnerships?
SYSTEMS SCEA

WHAT IS IT?
The work of federal, state, and local laws, policies, cultural norms, and even the physical and cultural makeup of your community in how it influences survivors’ experiences, and options for safety and economic security.

APPROACHING THE WORK
- What institution or system changes could assist survivors?
- What types of policy or legislative changes would support survivors’ economic security?
- What access points do you have to City or State Institutions? How could they serve survivors better?
- Who/what is available to assist devising alternative strategies (in the face of bad policy)?
- What, if any, engagement is being done to inform policy makers about survivor experiences?

CHALLENGES
- Systems are “not built for” people living in poverty or on the social margins;
- The physical safety risks of survivors shape current policies and inform the purpose of systems;
- Advocate capacity and organizational infrastructure makes collecting data, meeting with systems or institution leaders, time consuming and exhausting;
- Funding and grant requirements.

STRATEGIES IN PRACTICE
- Examine issues like: tax, housing, childcare, debt & credit, employment, criminal records barriers, banking & financial services, utilities, medical, transportation.
- Advocates can: Familiarize themselves with practice and policies in your area/state, volunteer to participate in state coalition work on housing policies
- Attorneys can: Train DV organizations on the implications of policies, participate in task forces to develop policy or legal recommendations, meet with advocates to identify alternative legal remedies to address housing barriers.
- Program leaders can: Initiate conversations with systems actors, form coalitions collect data on housing needs among survivors.
About Upcoming Training Toolkits

NOW: An Introduction (Guidebook)

Five Topics covered in Training Toolkits:
- debt/credit
- federal tax advocacy
- foreclosure
- court-related economic barriers
- credit/criminal record barriers to employment
Part I: Individual Advocacy Strategies

1. identify consumer and economic issues and how they manifest differently for underserved survivors,

2. model individual survivor-centered consumer advocacy, and

3. develop unique strategies that address the particular consumer issues facing survivors.

Part II: Partnerships for Systems Change

1. Share innovative models/examples work in consumer issue area, and

2. Use model to develop multilevel strategies for change in virtual breakouts (issue spotting, partner mapping, strategic action planning)
